Walker Audit — Skechers Welcome Email

1. Executive Summary

This is the non-member welcome trigger — the first impression email for new Skechers subscribers. The core mechanics are in place: a unique personalized promo code, a clear expiration date, and a full utility footer. But the execution underdelivers for a welcome email. There's no first-name personalization, no featured product imagery visible in the structured content, and the email leads with size-filtered browse links before the visitor has any reason to know what they want. The real damage is technical: the majority of image assets are served over HTTP, meaning a significant portion of renders — especially in Apple Mail with Mail Privacy Protection — will display broken images on what should be a high-conversion first touchpoint. A merge error in the legal copy produces a broken link. Together, these issues drag down what should be a reliable acquisition closer.

2. Business Impact Score: 5 / 10

The welcome offer itself is sound and the promo code is unique per recipient. But the HTTP image issue alone could silently fail for 30–50% of the audience depending on client mix. Broken images on a welcome email = broken first impression. The missing personalization and structural flatness compound the problem.

3. What's Working

Unique promo code (WEL20-C39C3FPRRN) is present, specific, and recipient-personalized — exactly right for a welcome trigger

Expiration date is explicit (April 10, 2026) — urgency is set without being vague

Size-filtered browse links for Women, Men, and Kids are a smart UX shortcut that reduces friction once the customer decides to shop

Skechers Plus cross-sell in the footer is correctly placed for a non-member welcome — plants the loyalty seed without hijacking the primary offer

BNPL options (AfterPay + Klarna) and Curbside Pickup are both present — covers key purchase-enablement signals

Category nav (Women / Men / Kids / Clothing / New Arrivals / Sale) is comprehensive and links are properly UTM-tagged with ?src=template

4. What's Weak

No first-name personalization — a welcome email with zero warm greeting is a missed relationship moment; this reads like a blast, not an acquisition trigger

HTTP image sources on the majority of assets — logo, hero image, app store badges, social icons, utility module icons, and the tracking pixel are all served over HTTP; these will be blocked in any client enforcing HTTPS-only or MPP image proxy (Apple Mail, Outlook 2019+)

No featured product content visible — the email appears to be offer code + nav + utility modules, with no curated product imagery or recommendations; for a welcome send, this is a missed opportunity to anchor the brand

Size-filtered links appear before category nav — the browse-by-size module is architecturally before "Shop Additional Styles," which inverts the natural discovery flow for a first-time visitor

Merge error in legal copy — the T&C; redemption URL renders as http://www.skechers.com/www.Skechers.com — broken and unprofessional in print and mobile display

Plain-text version is 71% raw URLs — no readable narrative; fails accessibility and plain-text clients entirely

Missing alt text on key images — hero image, several utility icons — images-off experience is silent and unhelpful

SMS opt-in module present but low context — "Let's Get Texting" appears with no framing of what SMS offers vs. email; feels like a checkbox module, not a value exchange

5. Recommendations

Fix HTTP → HTTPS on all image assets immediately. This is not cosmetic — it's a deliverability and rendering reliability failure affecting the logo, hero, and all utility module icons. Audit the ESP template and update every src= reference.

Add first-name merge field to the opening headline or subhead. Even a simple "Welcome, [First Name]" changes the register of this email.

Fix the doubled-domain merge error in legal copy (www.skechers.com/www.Skechers.com). This is likely a Salesforce Marketing Cloud template variable that isn't resolving — check the %%=RedirectTo(...)=%% or static text block in the footer.

Add alt text to all images — especially the hero and any image-linked CTAs. Users with images off should still understand the offer.

Include at least one featured product module — a 3-up product grid (bestsellers or top-rated) between the hero and the utility footer would dramatically increase relevance and give a new subscriber a reason to click beyond just redeeming the code.

Reorder modules — hero → product grid → category nav → size shortcuts → utility footer. The size-filtered links should come after product exploration, not before.

Rewrite the plain-text version with actual copy, not just a URL list. At minimum: offer headline, promo code, expiry, and a primary CTA link.

6. Bottom Line

A broken-image, no-personalization welcome email on the first touchpoint with a new customer is a costly miss. The promo code works, the legal is there, and the utility modules are complete — but the HTTP asset crisis and missing merge fields mean a percentage of recipients will see a degraded or broken experience at the exact moment the brand should be making its best impression. Fix the HTTPS issue as a P1. The personalization and product content gaps are the next tier.

7. Evidence

*Overall purpose of the email

Non-member welcome trigger (TRG_US_EN_NONMEMWELCOME_3) designed to drive first purchase via a 20% discount code. Correct use case for the trigger type.

*Hero / primary value proposition

"Your 20% Off Welcome Offer is waiting" with code WEL20-C39C3FPRRN. Offer is clear and correctly personalized per recipient. No visible hero image confirmed as rendering (given HTTP src issues). Expiry is present and specific.

*Membership / benefits section

Skechers Plus pitch appears in the lower utility block — "Free Shipping + Returns on All Orders. Plus Extra Perks!" with a JOIN NOW CTA. Placement is appropriate for a non-member welcome, but it's buried below four other utility modules. For a customer who hasn't yet purchased, this could be higher in the fold with one concrete benefit called out (e.g., free shipping on every order).

*Product discoverability / recommendation modules

No curated product imagery or recommendation carousel is visible in the content structure. The email relies entirely on category navigation and size-filtered browse links to drive product discovery — a passive approach. A first-time visitor has no anchoring product context from this email.

*Utility / secondary modules

Five secondary modules are present: SMS opt-in, App Download (iOS + Android), Curbside Pickup, Shop Now Pay Later (AfterPay + Klarna), and Find a Store. This is a complete utility bar. The SMS module's value proposition is thin ("exclusive offers" only); App and BNPL modules are appropriate but all image assets in these modules are HTTP and likely broken.

*Email-to-site continuity

Category links and size-filtered links include ?src=template or size parameters — tracking and landing page continuity is in place for the main navigation. The welcome offer promo code path (/ homepage) is the primary CTA destination, which is broad; a dedicated landing page filtered by bestsellers or new arrivals would improve conversion continuity.

*Bugs / friction / clarity issues

Critical: Majority of image src attributes use http:// — logo, hero, app badges, utility icons all affected. Will render broken in Apple Mail (MPP), Outlook 2019+, and any client enforcing HTTPS. QA flagged 10+ instances.

Critical: Merge/template error in legal copy — http://www.skechers.com/www.Skechers.com is a broken URL from an unresolved domain concatenation variable. Fails to link correctly on both web and mobile.

Moderate: 4 images confirmed missing alt text — including the hero image and multiple unnamed utility icons. Images-off rendering is silent.

Moderate: Plain text body is 71% raw URLs with no readable narrative — fails accessibility, plain-text clients, and any spam filter that scores on plain-text quality.

Low: SPF/DKIM authentication status unverified via AgentMail relay — worth confirming deliverability posture for the welcome trigger series.

Business Impact Score: n/a
