Walker Audit — Skechers Welcome Email

*Subject: Your 20% Off Welcome Offer is waiting!

*From: SKECHERS

1. Executive Summary

This is the third touch in Skechers' non-member welcome series, leading with a personalized 20% off promo code (WEL20-C39C3FPRRN) valid through April 10, 2026. The primary offer is clear and the code is unique per recipient — that's the floor, and it's met. Everything else undercuts it. The email carries a critical merge error that breaks the redemption URL in legal copy, a blanket HTTP image infestation that will cause broken images in strict clients, zero product content to anchor intent, and a bottom half so loaded with utility modules (SMS opt-in, app download, curbside, BNPL x2, store locator, Plus pitch) that the conversion hierarchy collapses into noise. For a welcome series reaching a non-member for the third time, this email is not working hard enough.

2. Business Impact Score

*5 / 10

The personalized code and offer deadline create urgency, but the broken URL in T&C; copy, extensive HTTP asset exposure, and absence of product imagery mean this email is leaving money on the table from both a technical and a merchandising standpoint.

3. What's Working

Unique promo code per recipient — WEL20-C39C3FPRRN is individualized, reducing abuse risk and enabling downstream attribution.

Offer clarity — Subject line, preview, and (presumably) hero all align on the same message: 20% off, act now.

Hard expiry date — April 10, 2026 is a concrete deadline, which helps urgency even if it's three-plus weeks away.

Size-filtered navigation — The email includes pre-filtered size links for Women, Men, and Kids (e.g., /women/shoes/?prefn1=size&prefv1;=7%7C7.5). When personalized to a known size, this reduces click-to-cart friction. Execution is unclear without knowing whether sizes are actually personalized here.

Multi-category nav — Women, Men, Kids, Clothing, New Arrivals, Sale — standard but functional coverage.

BNPL presence — AfterPay and Klarna are both represented, which supports conversion for price-sensitive new customers.

4. What's Weak

No product content — This is a welcome email for a shoe brand and there are zero product images, no featured styles, no bestsellers. A 20% off offer with nothing to shop is an incentive floating in a vacuum.

Utility module overload — SMS opt-in, app download, curbside pickup, BNPL (twice), store locator, and a Skechers Plus pitch all appear in the lower half of a single email. For a third-touch non-member who hasn't converted yet, this is noise, not value.

Skechers Plus is buried — The Plus membership pitch ("FREE SHIPPING + RETURNS ON ALL ORDERS") lands after five other utility modules. For a non-member welcome series, Plus enrollment is arguably the second-highest conversion goal after first purchase — it deserves a better position.

HTTP image assets — The Skechers logo, hero image candidates, app store badges, social icons, AfterPay logo, and tracking pixel all load over HTTP. Modern email clients (Gmail, Outlook, Apple Mail with image blocking) will either block or proxy these, producing broken image rendering for a significant share of recipients.

Alt text gaps — Multiple images have no alt text, meaning broken-image fallbacks show nothing. For recipients with images off, the email degrades to near-blank in key sections.

No visible personalization beyond the code — Third touch in a welcome series and the only personalized element appears to be the promo code. First name, browsing behavior, category preference — none visible.

5. Recommendations

Add product content to the hero section. Show 3–6 bestselling or trending styles with imagery, names, and prices. The discount is the hook; product is the reason to click.

Fix the HTTP image assets immediately. Update all http://image.emails.skechers.com src URLs to HTTPS across the template. This is a systemic template issue, not an isolated one — the same problem affects logo, app badges, social icons, and utility images.

Add alt text to all images. Even a generic fallback ("Shop Women's Shoes") preserves the call to action when images are blocked.

Fix the merge error in legal copy. The T&C; block contains http://www.skechers.com/www.Skechers.com — a doubled-domain template variable that failed to resolve. This is a broken URL in visible legal copy. Fix the merge tag or use a plain-text URL in the fallback.

Collapse the utility module stack. Pick two: BNPL and one of (SMS / App / Plus). Move Plus higher if the goal is member acquisition alongside first purchase. The current seven-module bottom section dilutes everything.

Use the offer expiry for urgency pacing. Three weeks is long enough that urgency isn't felt. Consider adding a day-count or "X days left" callout near the code.

Personalize beyond the code. By touch 3, behavioral or demographic data should be available to surface a relevant category (e.g., "We think you'll love these Women's styles"). A generic shop-all CTA for a third-touch non-member is a missed signal.

6. Bottom Line

A structurally sound welcome offer undermined by template debt, zero product content, and module bloat. The promo code does its job; the email around it doesn't. Fix the HTTP assets and merge error first (both are table-stakes technical issues), then rebuild the lower half with focus. This email is reaching non-members who've now seen three touches without converting — it needs to earn the click, not just announce the discount.

7. Evidence

*Overall purpose of the email

Third touch in the non-member welcome series. Primary goal: first purchase via 20% off promo code. Secondary goal implied: Skechers Plus enrollment.

*Hero / primary value proposition

"Your 20% Off Welcome Offer is waiting!" with code WEL20-C39C3FPRRN and April 10, 2026 expiry. Offer is clear. Without being able to see the rendered hero image, it's impossible to confirm whether the visual treatment matches the urgency of the subject line, but the code and deadline are present in the body.

*Membership / benefits section

Skechers Plus appears near the bottom: "FREE SHIPPING + RETURNS ON ALL ORDERS. PLUS EXTRA PERKS!" with a JOIN NOW CTA. For a non-member welcome series, this placement is too late and too low-contrast. The Plus pitch should sit higher, ideally adjacent to the welcome offer, framing it as: use your 20% now, then enjoy free shipping forever.

*Product discoverability / recommendation modules

None present. This is the most significant gap. The email has a full category nav (Women, Men, Kids, Clothing, New Arrivals, Sale) and an extensive size-filtered link set, but no actual product tiles, featured styles, or curated picks. For a first-conversion email, this is a critical miss.

*Utility / secondary modules

Seven distinct utility modules appear in the lower section: SMS opt-in (Text SKECHERS to 83828), App download (iOS + Android), Curbside Pickup, Shop Now Pay Later (AfterPay), Shop Now Pay Later (Klarna — separate entry), Find a Store, and Skechers Plus. The redundancy (two separate BNPL entries) and volume dilute every individual CTA's effectiveness.

*Email-to-site continuity

Category links (Women, Men, Kids, Clothing, New Arrivals, Sale) are present with ?src=template tracking. Size-filtered links suggest an attempt at pre-sorting the landing experience. Standard footer utilities (Account, Customer Service, Privacy Policy, Terms of Use, Preference Center) are all linked and appear functional. The broken URL in legal copy (http://www.skechers.com/www.Skechers.com) is the exception — this resolves to an error page and undermines trust in the T&C; block.

*Bugs / friction / clarity issues

CRITICAL: Merge error in T&C; copy — http://www.skechers.com/www.Skechers.com is a doubled domain from a failed template variable substitution. The intended URL (www.Skechers.com) appended to the base URL instead of replacing a variable.

HIGH: 10+ image assets served over HTTP, including the Skechers logo and key utility images. Will render broken in image-blocking or HTTPS-strict email clients.

MEDIUM: Multiple images lack alt text — broken image fallback shows nothing, degrading the experience for images-off recipients.

LOW: Tracking pixel (o.gif) served over HTTP with no alt text — standard but worth noting alongside the broader HTTP pattern.

INFO: Plain-text version is 72% URLs by character count — this is structurally expected but reinforces that the plain-text fallback provides near-zero readable content for text-only clients.
